

Voices from the Road

Permission to Record (Informed Consent)

What this is. Voices from the Road is a podcast and video show by Jolene MacFadden of Solo Sojourn. Women who camp, travel, or work on the road alone share their stories. This is a show, not a research study.

What happens. We meet on Zoom. First we talk for about 10 minutes. That part is not recorded. Then I record our talk for 10 to 15 minutes. Zoom records both sound and video. You may keep your camera off.

How I will use it. I will edit the recording. I may post it on the Solo Sojourn YouTube channel, on podcast apps, and on solosojournproject.com. I may also share short clips on social media. I may share it with my teacher and classmates in a graduate class at the University of Florida. Once a show is online, anyone can see it.

Your choices. You can skip any question. You can stop at any time. You can use your full name, your first name, or a made-up name. You can ask me to cut something you said. You can change your mind before the show goes online. After it is online, I will take it down from my pages if you ask. I cannot remove copies other people may have made.

Your safety. Please do not say where you are camped right now or where you will be next. Talk about places you have already left. If you are a camp host or park volunteer right now, please talk only about past jobs. Some parks do not let current hosts give interviews.

Pay. There is no pay for being on the show.

Saying yes. At the start of our recording, I will read a short version of this to you. If you say yes on the recording, you agree to be on the show and to the uses above. You must be 18 or older.
